Please download Free Trial of CDE 7 before purchasing: CDE 7 product. Is there a good argument against this? Simply because "it is true" does not make it a good argument. If it were not true, I would be against it, but I'm not. But "it is true" doesn't mean it is a good argument. You'd have to offer more than that. Can I offer more? It is true that Bush's tax cuts did not change the law of unintended consequences. But it is not true that it is without cost. You haven't offered any argument against the law of unintended consequences; you've offered no argument at all. As to the follow-up question of whether we should enact policies which we know have consequences we do not want, I can't say "never" because you haven't said what consequences you would be willing to accept as a cost of inaction. You are a subscriber to that pesky law of unintended consequences. It is true that it is true, but that does not mean it is good. Likewise it is true that "it is true" does not make it a good argument. But it is not true that if it were not true it would be a good argument. No, you'd have to offer more than "it is true". And you have not offered any. Does that mean I win? Well, you're trying to score points by scoring points. That will not work.
