If there are more then one of these x I need to remove all of them (just like i would do with sed). I found this: How can I remove a single instance of a character in a string? But this only works when you know the amount of x you want to remove. so how do I turn this into a loop with unknown amount of x. (I'm sorry if my terminology is wrong - I'm fairly new to unix) Thanks. A: s/\W\Wx//g will match two consecutive instances of anything (\W matches a "non-word" character, and matches any character), and will substitute each of them with the empty string.
